

Group Reflection - Jacob

What I took from the assignment 2 and integration of Group 41 (FortyOne) was the difficulties of getting started on the content for the assignment and working as a team of people who do not know each other. Although after our first week we had already dealt with a handful of hurdles to overcome, with being unsure which members were active or meant to be in our group, a few mishaps having people who were not actually in a group for example. Once we began interacting with each other it was smoother sailing, and we were able to determine what tasks needed to be done and assigned them all evenly amongst the four of ourselves. Heading into 2nd week of the assignment I believe it was, we encountered a set back where one of our members withdrew from the course, having us re-plan how we were to see out the work and complete the assignment. With a great sense of problem solving, James was able to suggest assigning parts of the rubric to everyone evenly so we could all take on the workload and return with it completed. With that in mind we ran into a few communication flaws throughout our meetings and schedule but were still able to communicate and connect in a way that would see progress and contribution. From that I would say something to improve on next time could be our communicating and time management through face-to-face meetings, something we have already acknowledged as a group and plan to double-down on next assignment.
